Trooper makes amazing comeback

By Tom Vinger

It wasn’t long ago that Tr. James Jones was being transported to the hospital in a medical helicopter, his upper right arm in tatters from a bullet fired from a high-powered rifle. At the time, doctors weren’t sure they could save his arm. But today, just a year and a half later, Jones is back on the job.

Jones was one of three law enforcement officers ambushed in May 2002 during an auto theft investigation in Hamilton County. A sheriff’s deputy was killed and another was shot and injured. The suspect killed himself as law enforcement closed in.

“History probably will not record it, but I will remember James Jones as a true Texas hero,” said R.K. Elliston, chief of the Texas Highway Patrol. “He, like many other troopers, put his life on the line and has endured a great deal for the people he took an oath to protect.”

Jones’ comeback was not an easy one. He underwent seven surgeries to reconstruct his arm, including bone, nerve and tendon grafts.

His law enforcement career began as a sheriff’s deputy and it took him six years to realize his goal of becoming a Texas state trooper in 1996.

“I worked too hard to become a trooper and invested too much time doing this job to give it up,” said Jones. “I was determined to come back and I got nothing but support everywhere I turned. Nobody said I couldn’t do it.”

Success wasn’t guaranteed though. Just five months after the shooting, Jones returned to light duty in October 2002. “At first, I had trouble holding and writing with a pen and shining my boots—simple things I used to take for granted,” said Jones.

The next year brought improvement as Jones adjusted to his limitations and continued his rehabilitation. Initially, he tried to do things left-handed, but then focused on working harder with his injured arm instead. His coworkers knew he was ready to return to regular duty when he went to a range and outshot his brother, who is also a Texas Highway Patrol trooper.

Jones returned to full-duty on Nov. 1, 2003 and transferred to Commercial Vehicle Enforcement Dec. 1 at his request. His duty station remains Goldthwaite.

“He became involved in a situation which should serve as a reminder to all of us that the job of a trooper is a very dangerous one,” said Elliston. “James’ story has a happy ending because he is a survivor, and for that I will always be thankful.”

Dear Fellow Employee,

On Dec. 2, Waco DL techs Amy Smith and Ayanna Brown helped nab a suspected forger. The two became suspicious when he presented a fake Texas driver license and a fake immigration card while attempting to obtain a valid driver license. The man, who was an Iranian national, was arrested. The FBI has notified us that they plan to pursue federal charges against him.

Cpl. Adan Caro and Tr. Russell Green had a pretty big day on Nov. 19: they seized a record $5.3 million in cash during a traffic stop in Jim Wells County. The CVE troopers had pulled over a truck hauling a load of bread, and the truck’s occupants lacked paperwork and gave conflicting stories. During an inspection of the cargo area, the troopers found the cash.

Both the incident in the Waco DL office and the cash seizure show the importance of remaining vigilant. Heads-up work on the part of all four DPSers involved in these incidents helped stop a forger and took contraband off our streets. Keep up the good work.

Ranger golf tournament raises money for good cause

The Texas Rangers of Company “A” hosted a charity golf tournament benefiting Texas youth. The Rangers presented a check to Communities in Schools Houston for $18,000.

Communities in Schools Houston is a non-profit organization that encourages at-risk students to remain in school by providing and coordinating social services that meet their physical and emotional needs. CIS also encourages these at-risk students to seek further training or higher education.

These are kids who come from families that live at or below the poverty line. The Rangers’ contribution will help provide support for major dental needs; support goal-setting activities such as trips to college campuses and businesses; and meet the emergency needs of CIS students with a focus on the bare necessities: food and housing.
