Dear fellow employee,

As you can see from the article to the left, the 80th session of the Texas Legislature was very productive for our agency. The Legislature approved pay raises for both commissioned and non-commissioned employees, as well as most of the Exceptional Items that we had requested. Some of the items we had requested (a driving track, several new buildings and labs throughout the state) will have to be approved by Texas voters in November. Keep an eye on the Chaparral over the coming months for more information about those projects.

For more information about many of the new laws going into effect, please see the DPS Intranet website. The Public Information Office will be sending out a news release in mid-August that will be posted at www.txdps.state.tx.us.

Commissioned officers are reminded that they must complete their physical readiness testing in order to receive the new pay raises.

The running portion of the Physical Readiness Test, including the 1.5 mile and 300 meter runs, can be a daunting challenge for many troopers. Whether you’re comfortable with one of the runs and not the other, or you’re not excelling at either, the good news is that you can improve your speed. You’ve probably heard that the best way to improve muscle strength is to slowly increase the load on your muscles each time you work out. This applies to running as well. You can improve your time by increasing the frequency, intensity and duration of your training runs.

Get FITT

To improve your run, apply the FITT formula. FITT stands for frequency, intensity, time and type of run.

- Start by increasing the frequency of your training runs. You should run at least three to four times a week.
- The intensity of your run must be high enough to challenge your body. Shoot for 60 to 85 percent of your maximum heart rate (220 minus your age).
- To improve your running skills, you must put in the time. Consider running for 30 minutes each time you train. If you can already do this, slowly increase run time to 40 minutes or more.
- Change the types of runs that you do. Each time you run, you can focus on different aspects of the run, such as duration and pace.

Improve speed by varying the types of training runs that you do:

Increase duration – For at least one of your weekly runs, you should work to improve the duration of your run. Training for the 1.5 mile and 300 meter, you can improve endurance and muscle strength by running twice the distance. If you’re concentrating on the 1.5 mile, run three miles, and if you want to improve the 300 meter, run 600 meters. If you attain the goal of easily running twice the distance of the run, imagine the boost in confidence and endurance this will give you during the PRT. When you’re doubling your distance, you should run at a comfortable pace.

Change pace – Another way to improve your speed is to change the pace of your running through interval training. (Interval training involves running shorter to medium distances at a fast pace followed by walking or jogging between the intervals.) For example, if you can finish the 1.5 miles without stopping, pick up the pace for every other quarter mile. For example, run 220 yards (1/2 around a track), walk 220 yards and run 220 yards. Keep this up until you have completed four to five intervals.

To improve your speed in the 300 meter run, try sprinting the “straights” (100 meter straight portion of a running track) and walking the “curves” (curved portion of a track).

Increase the length of the run and decrease the length of the walk to lower your 1.5 mile time. To improve speed in the 300 meter run, try sprinting the “straights” (100 meter straight portion of a running track) and walking the “curves” (curved portion of a track).

Warm up, cool down and cross train – Remember to schedule a warm-up and cool-down period before and after your runs, including stretching. On the days that you don’t run, cross-train with weight lifting and other low-impact exercise, such as bicycling. Cross-training will decrease the chance of injury and improve your strength, stamina and flexibility.

Reap the rewards – By running on a regular basis and challenging your body through distance and interval training, you can lower your 1.5 mile and 300 meter times. Instead of focusing on other runners finishing faster than you, shoot for beating your own previous run times. Soon, you’ll find that you are reaping the rewards that running has to offer, such as a slimmer and more athletic physique and a body that can handle exertion.
